

imperial officer

Apr 10 2009, 02:37 AM

IC: "Well, how do you use it?" asked Rex. "Well," said David, putting some rubber gloves on, "watch me.". He dipped his hand into the crate and picked a handful of goo up. He then smothered it onto the cavern walls. Then he picked up a laser gun. When he fired in at the cavern wall, nothing even suggested that it had been fired on. With that, the team set to work.

Lewa And Axalara

Apr 11 2009, 01:42 AM

IC: Zyra put on a pair of rubber gloves, watching david. Zyra picked up a handful of the goo and began smearing it over the cavern walls lightly. Zyra tested it with his gun to make sure he had applied it right. Then reached in for another handful.

imperial officer

Apr 12 2009, 01:35 AM

OOC: Actually, I have a plot point for my character I would like to do now, purely for the sake of the Rock Raiders Rpg.

IC: David checked the wall in the next cavern. It was very obvious that part of it was a fake rock wall. David investigated. He found himself in a darkened lab. Bet then.....something shocked him. He saw something....walk? Crawl? Scuttle? But then it was gone. Later, when he would become a Rock Raider, he would find out that he was the first minifig to get away with seeing an insectoid on Planet Earth.

OOC: And I don't want any posts about all of the team suddenly finding Insectoids. This is a one off.

Lewa And Axalara

OOC: Happy easter!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!   !!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

IC: Zyra looked around to find David missing. He sighed and walked off to find him. He was in another cavern. He looked pretty shocked.

"What's wrong?" Zyra asked.

"Nothing..." David replied.

Then the two agents went back to work.

Lewa And Axalara

Apr 12 2009, 11:32 PM

IC: Zyra grabbed some more of the G-16 stuff. He was beginning to hate this. He would much rather be shooting dinos. And just then he got his wish. A mutant T-rex came running down the tunnel at full speed. Zyra prepared for battle, but the dino ran right past him. Startled he looked back. David jumped out of the way of the roaring creature.

Zyra turned back to where the rex had come from, wondering what made it run so fast. Just then he got his answer, as about 12 mutant rexes about twice the size of the other came charging down the tunnel.

"Run!" Zyra screamed at David.

Lewa And Axalara

Apr 13 2009, 07:20 PM

IC: Zyra was running faster than he ever had, but surprisingly David was running faster. Probably some invention of his, or maybe he doesn't want to die, Zyra thought, chuckling to himself. Just then the tunnel split off in two directions. Zyra ran down the right one and David ran down the left. Zyra realized they were separated and went to turn back, then remembered the rexes.

He could hear the rexes running down the tunnel, he looked back to find six of the twelve were chasing him. He kept going until he reached yet another fork. With a quick glance back he headed down the right tunnel. After turning the corner at the end he jumped back. There was a river running through the centre. Zyra couldn't go back now.

Zyra looked back to see how much time he had, then jumped in to the water. The current was strong and almost sucked him under. Fortunately for Zyra he was a great swimmer. He soon washed up on the other side and pulled himself out, coughing and spitting.

He checked his equipment. Everything was soaked. He had lost his pack in the water as well. The only things he had left was his laser gun, a few wet scraps of paper in his pocket and a radio that had been destroyed by the current. He discarded the radio and the paper and stood up. A quick look around told him he was lost. He sighed and headed down the tunnel, hoping to find the others.

PeabodySam

Apr 13 2009, 07:52 PM

OOC: ... since when was Dr. Rex ~~human~~ Minifig again? Unless that's not really Dr. Rex...

Oh, and by the way guys, try not to include Dr. Rex in your posts, because he's nowhere near the Goo Caverns right now. And I know exactly where he is... but where's the fun in telling?

Thank you, imperial officer, for reposting David's profile. I meant to PM you about it a long time ago, but for some reason your PM system wasn't working, and then I forgot about it...

Unfortunately, there is another inconsistency. Willa Witch, Blackjack Hawkins, and Slyboots (who are all Minifigs) raced against Gypsy Moth (who is a Zotaxian, the species that uses the Insectoids vehicles) at the Fright Knights' Kingdom (Castle Cove), Pirate Skull Pass (Pirates' Forbidden Island), and Adventure Temple (presumably Adventure Island), which are all on the LEGO Planet.

IC: Rex and Amanda traveled deeper into Quadrant 57. David and Zyra had disappeared, for some reason. Since then, Rex and Amanda had searched been searching for them, but no success so far.

Rex kept looking over the ring Greybeard had given him whenever Amanda was not looking. Indeed, it was beautifully designed, and Rex fancied that if he ever were to propose to Amanda, a ring like this would be what he would use. But to use this ring itself? It belonged to Ben Gunn! Greybeard had stolen it, and the old Minifig probably did not even notice. No... it wasn't the fact that Ben Gunn did not notice that was the problem; it was that the ring may have helped Ben Gunn remember more about Dr. Rex. And if he remembered, perhaps he would not be so willing to give up the ring, which may have meant a lot for him.

Rex pocketed the ring and took the photograph back out. It wasn't that there were any more clues or things he could gain by looking at the picture; it was simply that Rex was interested in all the long-lost secrets behind it. Such as the identity of the other two scientists (though Rex suspected that Ben Gunn was one of them), or the date it was taken, or what those papers on the desk behind them contained information on...

Or even that, despite the clearly old age of the photograph, why Dr. Rex looked not a day older... well, before he became a Mutant T-Rex, that is.

Amanda held up her hand, as though saying: "Wait... do you hear that?"

Rex stopped and listened. Screaming... a male voice, no doubt... Rex's mind immediately flashed to Ben Gunn. "Come on!" he shouted, and took off deeper into the tunnel.

Then, somebody rammed into him.

Once Rex's head stopped spinning, he realized that it was a Minifig dressed in a blue suit. The Minifig had jet-black shoulder-length hair, a mustache, and a logo "A" on his uniform. As soon as Rex saw the last of these, he groaned. "Great..." he muttered. "Not another one of you Agents..."

The Agent quickly composed himself, seemed to sneer, and stood up. "Well, well, well, if it isn't the Dino Attack Team."

The Agents organization was formed back in 2008, when the LEGOLAND government felt that Alpha Team had run its course and should go into retirement. Although both the Alpha Team and the Agents worked for the same cause, to save the world, they both resented each other and thought of the other as a rival team. This feeling was shared between Evil Ogel and Dr. Inferno as well, since the former was outraged that the latter was trying to take over the world. As such, while they never directly attacked each other, the Alpha Team and the Agents always tried to outdo one another.

Then, when the Dino Attacks began, the Dino Attack Team was founded by Specs, Shadow, Digger, Viper. Dash Justice, while not one of the founding agents, played a large role in getting the government to fund the Dino Attack Team, thus the Dino Attack Team and Alpha Team had a mutual respect for one another. The Agents, on the other hand, snobbishly stepped in and said that they would take care of the problem. Thus, the Dino Attack Team shared part of the resentment towards the Agents.

It wasn't as violent a rivalry, per se, as the Montabricks and the Capulegots. But it was enough to get both Dino Attack members and Agents irritated in the presence of one another.

"What are you doing here?" muttered Rex.

"Agent Chase ordered our team to secure the Goo Caverns," smiled the Agent. "He said that Agent Intelligence just learned that the Goo is lethal to Mutant Dinos. He told us to get down here, get a bunch of Goo, defeat all Mutant Dinos and Ogel's drones, and get out!"

"So, why were you screaming like a little girl?" remarked Rex.

"I wasn't," the Agent frowned.

"Oh, yes you were," chuckled Rex. "Something frightened you?"

"Ah, it works every time!" sneered the Agent. "You see, unlike your Dino Attack team, us Agents are told to disguise our emotions. You may have thought I was screaming in fear, but it was all just a ploy, of course!"

Amanda rolled her eyes. Rex agreed - it wasn't worth arguing with a stubborn Agent who refused to admit his own fear. The fact that somehow the Agents organization had gotten hold of (a slightly incorrect version of) the information about the Goo irritated Rex. He was sure that the Agents did not find that out on their own - probably, they were using a recording device in the presence of Reptile or something. "Well, if you weren't screaming, and you weren't afraid... what is it you saw down there?"

The Agent's smirk disappeared. "I dunno... it looked like Spy Clops, but it wasn't Minifig... probably just some freaky experiment of Ogel's. I heard your team allied with Ogel?"

"Correction," Rex held up a finger, "he allied with us. Now, if you'd excuse us, we've got to be doing some real work down here in the Goo Caverns. Tell your Agents that the Dino Attack Team is already reinforcing the Goo Caverns, and that we'll check out your Sly Clocks or whatever it was down there that spooked you."

The Agent snorted, and walked past the Dino Attack members. Amanda watched him go, then shook her head in disgust.

OOC: Don't reveal what the "Spy Clops" thing is. I want that pleasure myself.

Just a little tie-in with the Agents theme. Do note that, since my RPG posts are usually told through Rex's perspective, the Agent's personality may be distorted to seem more rude to you, the audience, than he actually was.

PeabodySam

Apr 15 2009, 08:45 PM

OOC: In fact, any resemblance between that Agent and Mayonnaise Quirke is strictly coincidental. Why? Because, up until now, I've never even heard of Mayonnaise Quirke or this Discworld series! Of course, now I'm curious about this series... But the unnamed Agent is based off the snobbish I'm-better-than-you personality that TC01 and I both think of when we think of an Agent through Alpha Team's eyes.

Antrakha, thank you for replacing Dr. Rex (which would have created mass confusion and paradoxes) with Dr. Inferno (to tie in with my Agents tie-in).

Cohrii, well... if you're expecting Libo, just so you know, he's still in the Dino Attack HQ Medical Ward, recovering from his wounds inflicted upon him by Mutant Lizards.

IC: Rex showed Amanda the message he just received from Reptile. "Those darn Agents," Rex muttered. "I bet if they weren't down here, Dr. Inferno wouldn't be down here either."

Amanda bit her lip, concerned.

Rex studied her expression for a moment, to figure out its full meaning. "Yes," he murmured. "Ogel, Sam Sinister, Brickster, and Vladek all agreed to work with the Dino Attack Team to end the Mutant Dinos... but none of the other villains have, including Dr. Inferno. Which means that any of them could be working with Dr. Rex. Basil the Batlord, the Meca One, Senor Palomar, the Aquasharks... and if we start including enemies from space, imagine if Alpha Dragonis got his UFOs on Dr. Rex's side!"

Amanda looked up at the tunnel ceiling. She made a broad gesture, which Rex immediately understood.

"I don't think so," he sighed. "Even if, like Ogel, Dr. Inferno wants to take over the world, which cannot be taken over if already ruled by Mutant Dinos... he might be less willing to make an alliance with us, because Ogel is already on our side. Plus, if Dr. Inferno starts working with us, that might give the Agents a perfect opportunity to just bring this company rivalry down to violence!"

Amanda nodded. Before their conversation could continue any further, a loud, painful Mutant Lizard screech filled the tunnel. Rex took out his Sonic Screamer while Amanda took out a Cosmotronic Ray. They slowly and cautiously continued down the tunnel. The screech came again, this time Rex could tell there were two Mutant Lizards.

The tunnels went deeper and deeper, and became darker and darker. Rex was forced to take out a flashlight. One more screech from the Mutant Lizards, then after that the only thing Rex heard was the ambience of dripping water.

"What is this...?" Rex murmured as the flashlight revealed several strands of an almost-translucent white material. Located in the strands were several barbs that stuck out.

Amanda bent down and gently touched a part of the strand where there weren't any barbs. When she lifted her hand again, the strand came with her hand, stuck to her fingers. Amanda frowned, and tried to pull the strand off with her other hand, but that the strand started sticking to that hand as well. Luckily, she was wearing gloves, so with some help from Rex, she took off the gloves and left them attached to the strand. She turned to Rex, bit her lip, and started tapping her fingers together.

"A spider did this?" Rex blinked, astounded. The strand, if it were webbing, was much too thick and long to be a spider's creation... unless it were a giant Minifig-sized spider? Sam Throramebi had mentioned that he met one of those on Planet U... "Wait... Amanda, do you know what Spy Clops looks like?" Rex asked.

Amanda thought for a moment, then took out her PDA. She pressed the button on her PDA that switched its screen to a drawing pad, which was often used by Dino Attack agents to draw quick maps of an area. She removed a stylus from the PDA, and began sketching what Rex saw was a Minifig, but with six mechanical spider-like legs.

Rex's eyes widened. "I think we've found what the Agent found..." he whispered, recalling that the Agent had seen a creature that looked vaguely like Spy Clops. Rex lifted his flashlight to the farther end of the tunnel, and gasped. It was filled with webs, made from the same substance as the strand. "You were right, Amanda... but what kind of spider made this?"

Carefully, Rex and Amanda made their way around the webs. It was no easy task - some of the webs nearly blocked the entire tunnel! They also found two Mutant Lizards hanging in the webs. Rex looked carefully at one of them, and grimaced. "Dead. From poisoning. Whatever you do, Amanda, don't touch those barbs with your bare hands."

Then, something landed on Rex from above, knocking him to the ground. Something cold... something hard... something metal...

PeabodySam

Apr 18 2009, 11:49 AM

OOC: Um, yeah... is that supposed to be a good thing, or a bad thing?

Oh, and as a side note, TC01: the epic clash of Alpha Team + Ogel + Dino Attack vs. Dr. Inferno + Mutant Dino/Viking Monster Hybrids was just that: epic. It was an exciting thing to read... I'm sure it was even better to write.

IC: Rex sprang back to his feet. The blow to the head combined with suddenly standing up had the unintended side-effect of Rex falling back down to the ground, dizzy. Something metal hit him again, this time in the face. Rex dropped his flashlight. He caught a glimpse of something leaping out of the light, then something came down upon the device, and with a loud crunch! the flashlight was broken into pieces, throwing the tunnel into complete darkness.

As soon as Rex's head stopped spinning, he stood up again, and desperately looked around in the dark. He couldn't see anything at all. "Amanda!" he shouted for his teammate.

He was met with only a raspy, sinister laughter that came from all around.

Rex narrowed his eyes. "Show yourself, whoever you are!" he called.

The laughter came again. "Why," a voice spoke, "should I reveal myself when it is so much more fun to torture you by keeping you in suspense of what and whom I am?"

"Are you Spy Clops?" Rex called. "Are you that thing that the Agent encountered?"

"No... and yes," the voice responded. "While I did encounter the Agent of whom you speak, my name is not Spy Clops. I have never worked with Dr. Inferno, nor have I ever seen that pitiful fool in person."

Rex felt a hand grip his shoulder. He immediately reacted by flinching, but when he felt for whom the hand belonged to, Rex realized it was only Amanda. Upon figuring this out, he embraced her and gripped her tightly, to ensure that he did not lose her again. The hardest part about being a mute, Rex realized, was that nobody could hear you scream.

"Yes..." chuckled the voice. "Embrace one another. It may be the last time you get to do so... so enjoy the moment while it still exists." There came more laughter. "Ah, yes... your names are Rex and Amanda Remous, also known as Claw. You are both Dino Attack Agents... and what's this? Oh, very intriguing... you're here on a mission, assigned by Evil Ogel himself, to secure the Goo Caverns and rebuild Ogel's underground mining compounds."

"How do you know all this?" inquired Rex.

"Oh, I'm more than capable of hacking into Dino Attack Headquarters' computer, even from down here. I have access to all your information. Best of all, I do not even need a computer!"

"Wait... what?"

More laughter. "It's too bad you won't live to find out what I mean. Even as we speak, I'm calculating over a thousand ways to kill you... and most of them hurt."

"If you're with Ogel, you'll regret killing us! Ogel probably would punish you for your insolence!"

"Ogel? Hah! I betrayed him years ago. It was the only thing I could do. He would have had me trashed, compacted into a weighted cube, and then thrown into an Ogel Emergency Incinerator."

Rex felt Amanda moving in his arms. Then, he heard something click, and suddenly Rex was aware of a bright light in the cave. Rex immediately shielded his eyes in the sudden light, but he knew what it was: an emergency lighter, something that only certain Dino Attack agents were armed with. The reason was simple: Specs did not want all of his agents running around with lighters. Used improperly, these could easily set everything on fire, and early in the Dino Attack, several agents... abused their privileges with lighters.

Rex did not know how long the lighter would give off light, but he took advantage of the opportunity. Hearing some noise off to the left, he spun around and saw a frightening image.

Like Spy Clops, the figure Rex saw appeared to look like a Minifig, but lacked any normal Minifig anatomy from the hips down. Instead, the figure had an abdomen, with four long arachnid legs attached. The figure's torso and arms were white, and appeared to be that of a jail prisoner. It wore a black, hooded cloak that did not conceal a rectangular, gray head that had two black-red eyes and a horrid smile. Rex, however, could tell that, unlike Spy Clops, this creature was completely mechanical. That, combined with the jail torso and the rectangular-shaped head, made Rex realize just what it might be.

"A.... Brickster Bot?" stammered Rex.

The robot opened its mouth, revealing two fangs, like that of a vampire. "Correction... a Brickspider Bot, and the first... and the last... of my kind." Then, teeth bared, the Brickspider Bot leaped towards Rex and Amanda.

PeabodySam

Apr 20 2009, 10:43 AM

OOC: Welcome to the crew, John Blueheart! 😊 It's always good to see new recruits joining us these days.

imperial officer, I can easily explain the LEGO Racers manual in the context of this RPG's timeline. Let's just say for the moment that to locate every single boss racer, Rocket Racer and Veronica Voltage needed to travel in time:

- Very little of Captain Redbeard has been seen since 1997, so to easily locate him, they travel back in time to 1989 and easily find him.
- There has been no sign of King Kahuka since 1995, so Rocket Racer and Veronica Voltage easily locate him in 1994.
- Knowing that Basil the Batlord would be less willing to join a racing championship when he's busy trying to take over Castle Cove, they travel back in time to before he tries to take over Castle Cove (for example, 1993) and find a more relaxed Basil the Batlord, and so manage to more easily convince him to join.

- Johnny Thunder is too busy looking for the Sun Disc at the moment, so Rocket Racer and Veronica Voltage locate him in late 1998, right after the end of his Egyptian adventure.

- Baron Sam Sinister has not been seen since 1998, so they locate him at the beginning of 1998, before he goes to Egypt.

- Gypsy Moth is stressed, because the Zotaxian economy is going down now that the Rock Raiders are mining the same Energy Crystals on the same planet, so in order to find a less-stressed Gypsy Moth, Rocket Racer and Veronica Voltage go to 2003.

In addition, just because Rocket Racer and Veronica Voltage use time travel, it doesn't mean that everyone in the LEGO Universe is capable of time travel. Thus, how do you explain when Johnny Thunder and friends were returning from the Orient Expedition and a highly-futuristic robot team was escaping a laboratory, at precisely the same exact time as a modern-day snowboarding race? Or how Pepper Roni could travel to Castle Island and Adventure Island?

Cohrii, yes, I meant to say Ogel Emergency Intelligence Incinerator. Ironically, that second-to-last word slipped my mind... That's got to be the dumbest thing of all![/GLaDOS]

IC: Rex and Amanda let go of one another to roll out of the way, just before the Brickspider Bot landed where they were standing a moment ago. The mechanical foe wasted no time in turning and hitting Rex with one of its fists. When it tried again, Rex was ready, and kicked the Brickspider Bot in the torso. Although it hurt to be kicking metal, it was enough to send the Brickspider Bot sprawling onto the ground.

Amanda reached onto her belt and pulled out a wrench. She clubbed the Brickspider Bot in the head with it repetitively, but the robot bit down on the tool with its fangs after about the fifth time. Before Amanda could react, the Brickspider Bot was back on its feet, and with renewed strength, it bit down harder upon the wrench, snapping the tool. Then, the Brickspider Bot jumped... but it did not come down.

Rex and Amanda readied their weapons. "You can't just spend all your time hiding, creature!" Rex spat.

The Brickspider Bot laughed again. "I've hid for a long time. I'm patient, unlike you. So, if it's torture, I guess I'll prolong the waiting. I do love playing with my food... theoretically speaking, of course, for I do not need to eat. Though I do love feeding on your terror and fear. But since the cat is out of the bag, I guess I'll tell you a little story!"

Amanda moved her lighter in all directions, trying to locate the Brickspider Bot. But no matter where she pointed it, she never could seem to find the mechanical being.

"It was several years ago," began the Brickspider Bot. "The Brickster had just escaped from the LEGO Island jail, and was doing all in his power to make sure that for once he got things his way. For starters, he knew he couldn't just rely on standard Brickster Bots. No... he told his Brickster Bot-producing company OGEL Robotics to make some new types."

Rex heard movement off to the left, so he spun around and fired his Cosmotronic Ray. No response from the Brickspider Bot came, aside from another laugh.

"They created many new types of Brickster Bots. The High-Objective Non-Autonomous Bot, for example: a Brickster Bot designed for underground and rocky terrain missions. The Ninja Brickster Bot for another: more stealthy, and skilled with a katana. But OGEL Robotics was running out of ideas, so they held a contest among the villains of the LEGO Universe to design new special operations Brickster Bots."

"So, you were one of them?" inquired Rex. He figured that, the longer the Brickspider Bot's attack was postponed, the more time they had to figure out a strategy against the Brickspider Bot.

"Indeed. Evil Ogel and the Brickster have worked together in the past. Thus, Evil Ogel saw OGEL Robotics' request for new designs. He put his Worker Drones... to work, obviously. Their first design, a parrot-like Brickster Bot, was so utterly stupid that he threw the blueprints and the Worker Drones out the window of one of his bases. Their next design was of a spider-based Brickster Bot. To see how well their design would work, they created me: the Brickspider Bot v1.0. Since I was a prototype, they made me larger than their original blueprints stated."

Rex and Amanda heard something land to their right. Turning, Amanda exposed it with her lighter to be a skull, presumably the unfortunate remains of whoever was the previous Minifig besides that Agent to meet the Brickspider Bot. He's playing with us, Rex thought bitterly. Trying to spook us, make us scared and paranoid...

"Ogel specifically wanted his design of Brickster Bot to be inherently evil, as opposed to the mischievous standard Brickster Bots. Thus, after my body was assembled, he played around with my wiring and circuits until I had personality and intelligence, just what he was looking for. Too much, in fact. He and his brother General Evil feared that I was growing too intelligent and had too much personality, and that I may up rise against them. I did not let them rewire me to make me less intelligent. I did not let them remove my personality. Thus, Ogel ordered me, and the other prototype Brickspider Bots, destroyed. Unfortunately for him... the Elite Rock Drones assigned to destroy me were not so lucky as me. The later Brickster Bot Spider model produced by OGEL Robotics was designed without the excess intelligence and personality."

"So, because of this, you can speak?" Rex inquired.

"Not quite. I had heard about a Purple-Headed Frozeen's Model of a Brickster Bot. Of course, he usually does not go by his full name, but simply the initials PBB. While this PBB was flawed in the sense that he did not see the world as it ought to be seen - a grab for power - he had something I wanted, the ability to speak. I heard that PBB was destroyed in LEGO City earlier this year, so I found his remains. Luckily, there was just enough intact of his head to tell how it was wired, and thus I was able to rewire myself to be capable of speech."

Rex felt sickened. This Brickspider Bot was like a tomb robber, hunting down PBB's remains and using them to its advantage. Angered, Rex took out his Cosmotronic Ray and fired at the ceiling, the one place where Amanda had not yet checked with her lighter. He then rolled out of the way seconds before the Brickspider Bot hit the ground. Before the robot could get back to its feet, Amanda wrapped her arms around all four of its legs. Although they squirmed like worms in her grasp, she did not let go.

"You're sick," hissed Rex. "Ogel was right - you should have been destroyed years ago. And I'm going to do the honors."

The Brickspider Bot laughed bitterly. "You are kidding me. Did you think that by rendering me unable to walk can allow you to destroy me? That's got to be the dumbest thing of all - whoa, whoa!" The Brickspider Bot's expression turned to fear, seconds before Rex's foot came down upon the Brickspider Bot's head. He stomped on the Brickspider Bot's head again and again, until the robot's head was smashed in. The rest of the mechanical being's body twitched slightly, then ceased to move at all.

Rex narrowed his eyes at the remains of the Brickspider Bot. His expression softened when he lifted his head to look at Amanda. "Now, how do we get out of here?" he asked.

PeabodySam

Apr 23 2009, 08:33 AM

OOC: Time to reply to some specific quotes:

I doubt that you were the cause of the debate, TC01, so don't worry.

Yeah, I know that the whole concept of a Mutant T-Rex in a Minifig disguise seemed awfully awkward... which is why, soon, I'm planning on including a canon explanation as to how it actually worked.

Once more, I was not referring to your timeline. As I said in a PM, your timeline is similar to, but far from exact, the real world's timeline. What I was referring to was the idea (that was not yours and not mine) that human history was the same as LEGO history.

Well, you, me, and TC01 are the 'senior citizens' of this RPG... and if Cyberstrike decides to come back after all, he could be considered another senior citizen...

BTW, I am in fact 102 years old. The problem was that the "Interests" section of my profile was outdated, and when I tried to update it, BZPower wouldn't let me do so unless I changed my year of birth to 1910. So, even though my profile says I'm 99 years old, I'm in actuality 102, so I do not 'age backwards'. Here's the proof!

Oh, I guarantee that by the end of the RPG, the AT/DA and the Agents will come to an understanding... how else could we make an epic final battle?

Yeah, I think that CoKK, Atton, and Alpha have left/"gone on extended break" with this RPG... however, if I don't receive word from them soon, I may have to remove their profiles from the Agent Database, because they wouldn't be considered active members of the RPG any more.

Ha, you needn't worry so much. I've already mapped out Dr. Rex's defeat in my mind, and while it will be a very climatic and surprising defeat, I can safely say that, aside from Dr. Rex, none of my characters (Amanda, Frozeen, Greybeard, etc.) will have to die. And, since I know exactly how Dr. Rex will be defeated, I doubt that any of your characters, Cohrii's characters, TC01's characters, etc. will die.

Still open to suggestions on the next story arc, and once you guys are finished with everything that you want to do down here in the Goo Caverns, give me the 'thumbs up' and I'll begin the transition over to the next story arc.

IC: Rex, Amanda, and two Hybrids locked the red-black wall in place. Around them, Ogel's drones and Rex's Hybrids were at work reconstructing this particular underground mining center of Ogel's.

Luckily, it had not taken long to escape the lair of the Brickspider Bot after the thing was 'killed'. It had taken a while without the help of David or Zyra, both of whom Rex had not heard from, but at last most of the walls of the Goo Caverns were reinforced, either with G-16 or by the old-fashioned metallic beams. Quadrant 57 was secured, and now Rex and Amanda were overseeing, as well as helping, the rebuilding of an Ogel mining center, which would be used to easily access more of the Goo.

After fixing the wall in place, the two Hybrids set to work on creating a massive drill, along with many other Hybrids and drones. It was funny, actually; Rex never saw the Hybrids underground until now. Odd, because he had never particularly ordered them down here, and yet they just sort of randomly showed up. It didn't matter, Rex decided. As long as they thought that he was Dr. Rex, they were under his command, and so they would help in the large task that needed to be done.

"After this base is finished," Rex asked a passing Super Ice Drone, "how long would it take to mine the Goo?"

The Super Ice Drone stared back at Rex with cold, black eyes. "As soon as this base is finished," it replied, "we will begin the mining process. From then on, we'll have an increasing supply of Goo, but to get a large amount of Goo from each underground base, we'll need... a month or two of mining. I'm sure you Dino Attack agents can wait that long, hmm?"

Rex bit his lip. The longer they spent down here, the more time Dr. Rex would have to gather his forces on the surface. Still, he knew the Goo was vital to the success of the Dino Attack team.

Then again, Rex thought as he looked over Ben Gunn's ring, the more time we spend down here, the more time I have to return to Ben Gunn. This time, though, I'd need to bring more agents with me...

Progress was going well so far. Quadrants 1-12, 17-39, and 45-66 were all reinforced, and Ogel's bases were being steadily reconstructed there. Quadrants 16, 40-44, and any quadrants of a higher number than 67 were still undergoing reinforcement. The only parts of the Goo Caverns that were still in bad shape were Quadrants 14 and 15, the two volcanic quadrants that even General feared.

I guess all we have to do now, Rex decided, helping a few Sea Drones in stabilizing a pillar, is just sit and wait.

PeabodySam

Apr 28 2009, 07:46 PM

OOO: Well, I think this may be my last IC post for the rest of the week, so I don't think I'll get started on the transition to the next story arc just yet. Instead, I'll just set the stage for the transition. I hope we've got enough guys down here for this to properly work...

IC: Rex groaned as he sat down in a chair. It was hard work, convincing the Super Ice Drone who oversaw construction of this Ogel base to contact Ogel himself to request more drones to speed up the process. Already, most of this base was completed, and the mining of the Goo Caverns had restarted. While the treaty prevented the Dino Attack Team from directly harming a drone, most team members were trying to get the drones to work faster using... arguable methods. The faster more goo was mined, the faster the Mutant Dinos could be defeated.

Still, it would be at least a few weeks before enough goo was mined. That's what aggravated Rex the most. He was no miner - that job belonged to Sam Throrage, and Frozeen to a lesser extent - so he disallowed himself from doing any mining himself, in case he pressed the big red button that miners know not to press unless you want to blow up the entire drilling machine.

Rex checked his PDA, and frowned. It was a good thing that General and Shock had already evacuated Quadrant 14, he decided, because a recent eruption damaged not only Quadrant 14, but its neighboring Quadrants 13 and 15. Drones and Dino Attack Agents alike were hard at work trying to fix the damage done to Quadrant 13; General had described it as, thankfully, being abnormally large, so eruptions of that scale were unlikely to occur again.

Rex's new radio crackled to life. "This is Team Commander Specs, is Elite Agent Rex there?" he heard.

"No, I have no idea where he is," replied Rex, with a tone of sarcasm. Being down here in the Goo Caverns was starting to get tiring, as there were running out of things to do.

"This is no time for jokes, Rex!" scolded Specs. "Reports have been showing that Mutant Dino armies have been gathering on various islands of interest, and have been making nesting grounds. These reports are unconfirmed, so do not take action yet, but it appears to be that LEGO Island is home to a large number of Mutant Pterosaur and Mutant T-Rex nests. But that's not all, -n f--- th- --nstru-----ia p---s m-y con----"

"You're breaking up!" Rex tried to say, but he doubted that Specs could hear him. Then, the radio fell silent. Cursing, Rex tossed it aside, stood, and made his way out of the Ogel base.

Along the way, he passed a vat of goo. Two drones wearing red biohazard suits and large, black helmets walked over to the vat. From it, they extracted a small portion and filled a container with it. Then, they filled a second container. With that, the drones started to carry away the containers.

"Wait a minute," Rex stopped them, "where do you two think you're going?"

"We're Barrel Pusher Drones," one replied, without stopping. "A class slightly higher than Worker Drone, but all we really are would be Worker Drones in fancy suits trained to carry barrels of goo."

"We're taking it to the Trouble Train and the Trouble Sub," the other continued. "From there, we can ship it out to Ogel's Island, LEGO City, and other areas. We figured it might be the most efficient way of transporting the goo."

"Yeah," chuckled the first, "what's the point of mining the goo, if you're just going to keep it down - " A loud Mutant Lizard screech cut off the drone. Rex spun in the direction of a large, dark tunnel that led to Quadrant 46. "Ah, crud!" gasped the Barrel Pusher Drone. "Mutant Lizards! We're going to die!" With that, both Barrel Pusher Drones dropped their goo containers, which shattered and spread their contents all over the cavern floor. They ran away in panic.

Rex watched them go, then shook his head pitifully. Luckily, a Hybrid was standing nearby, so Rex gestured towards the creature to follow. Blindly loyal to the one that it thought to be Dr. Rex, the Hybrid agreed without a second thought. Grabbing his Sonic Screamer, Rex ran down the dark tunnel with the Hybrid close behind. Funny, he wondered. I could swear that this cavern was lit up the last time I traveled through it... must be that Mutant Lizard's fault. I guess I'll just have to get rid of the Mutant Lizard, and turn back on the lights.

Then, he heard movement off to the left. He spun around, and heard some sort of humming noise. A strangely familiar jolt of energy and metal slammed into Rex's forehead, and then everything went dark.